6.3.5 The institution has a performance appraisal system for teaching and non-teaching staff.

Response:

The following methods can be used to evaluate if financial resources are being used effectively and efficiently: The cost of salaries, electricity, internet access, maintenance, stationery, and other consumables, as well as lab equipment purchases, furniture purchases, and other development costs, are all covered by the college budget, along with both ongoing and one-time expenses. The accounting department will monitor spending in line with the assigned budget. Any interested party is welcome to submit suggestions for improving the faculty's performance through the college's suggestion box. Students frequently give comments, and they are welcome to do so to the administration and the principal. Students have the opportunity to voice their ideas about the different academic and extracurricular programmes that the college provides throughout the academic year. The evaluation also includes in-depth analysis completed by peers and students. The college asks students for written feedback at the end of the academic year. On the feedback form, there is a section devoted to teacher and staff performance. The professors are required to provide a report on how they rate themselves. The principal, teachers in charge of certain committees, event managers, and teachers submit their overall evaluation. All of the recommendations and comments are examined, and a report is then created and presented to the Manager, who then decides what course of action the executives should do. The analytical report is put into practice for the benefit of the faculty, other personnel, and ultimately for the advancement of the college as a whole. The mode of operation is worked out by concerned decision-making bodies, committees, and officials, who then supply the required resources and give directives for its implementation. If necessary, the services of an expert are also requested in order to obtain the appropriate direction.
